People should get a COVID-19 test if:

- They have symptoms of COVID-19.

- They have been around someone with COVID-19. People should get tested within 3-5 days after exposure.

- They are needed for screenings (schools, workplaces, congregate settings, etc.).

- They are traveling, both before and after travel.

- It has been requested by a healthcare professional or a public health official.

A negative test does not mean you will remain negative after you have been tested. You may also test negative if your sample was tested early in your infection, and you may test positive later during your illness. If you were exposed to someone who is confirmed to have the virus that causes COVID-19, it is important to stay home and away from others (self-quarantine) for at least 5 days.
